

AN 'OPTIMIST' IN THE MIDDLE EAST | By Jonathan Randal '51

For nearly 20 years, far-flung readers of the International Herald Tribune and leading Arab World newspapers have read the tireless suggestions of John Whitbeck '64 about furthering what euphemistically used to be called the Palestinian-Israeli "peace process." And while sometimes disagreeing with his views, they have come to respect his dogged efforts to find a way out of the unequal and intractable struggle in the Holy Land.

His silence over the past year reflects, I suspect, his sense of discouragement at the extremely messy events the Bush administration has created on the ground in the Middle East and the near-impossibility, even for a determined optimist, to find anything new, hopeful and constructive to propose.

Now in this slim volume, aptly entitled The World According to Whitbeck (Five and Ten Press; 2005), he has collected his well argued op-ed essays demonstrating what a long-optimistic American was convinced could constitute a fair deal in that quintessentially troubled corner of the Middle East. Most date from the coming to power of George W. Bush and Ariel Sharon in 2001. But also included are later versions of Whitbeck's "Two States, One Holy Land," his framework for peace and a "condominium solution" for sharing Jerusalem, first published in 1988.

The great pity is that these views constitute only The World According to Whitbeck, rather than the real world in the corridors of power, most especially in Washington where the fate of so many nations is decided. As a longtime foreign correspondent covering the Middle East, I confess that in the past I often found Whitbeck's writings overly sunny. (Frankly, I and many other observers abandoned hope for an equitable solution many years ago, when more than 100,000 Israelis were settled in the occupied West Bank. They now number in excess of 200,000.)

Taxing Whitbeck's optimism is not meant as criticism of this veteran lawyer who is extremely well acquainted with the Middle East and its often self-defeating complexities. He holds no brief for terrorism, be it the handiwork of Palestinians or the state of Israel. Rather, my doubts about Whitbeck's efforts reflected a working journalist's long foot-leather experience with the region, and the professional deformation that inevitably follows. Such proximity to accumulated events does little to encourage optimism.

In any case, lawyers and journalists have different missions. Whitbeck's rigorous logic bears witness to what an excellent legal mind could produce despite—and, perhaps more accurately, because of—the increasingly grim situation on the ground. A nonexhaustive list of depressing events includes Washington's hollow formal insistence that it serves as an honest broker between our Israeli allies and the increasingly landless Palestinians; American acquiescence to relentless Israeli encroachment on Palestinian land, culminating with the rescinding of traditional U.S. opposition to Israeli settlements and the tacit approval of the wall that is now completing the isolation of Palestinians into Bantustans; and Bush's endorsement of Sharon as "my friend," despite the former Israeli prime minister's blood-spattered responsibility in the slaughter of hundreds of Palestinian civilians in the Sabra and Chatila refugee camp during his ill-considered invasion of Lebanon in 1982.

In fact, Bush never really pushed hard for the independent Palestinian state he invoked in 2002 and the "road map" for getting there. He came into office in January 2001 determined to avoid the hands-on diplomacy on which Bill Clinton lavished so much time and effort towards the end of his presidency.

All this is ancient history, it might be argued, and so, too, is official Washington's often condescending agreement with that old Israeli chestnut: "The Arabs never miss an opportunity to miss an opportunity." Only our government, Congress and neoconservatives fail to see the despair with which almost all the rest of the world views U.S. policy in the Holy Land.

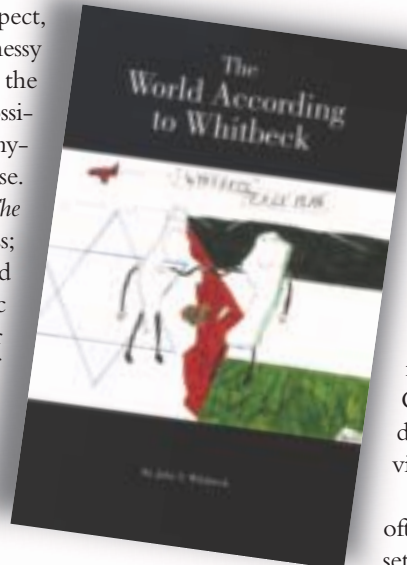

The great merit of Whitbeck's book is his calm, often dry legal language designed to find fair ways to settle this more than century-long crisis. To be called utopian is a badge of honor for an American who is one of the very few redeeming exceptions to so much sanctimonious official U.S. double-talk and double-dealing.

The stunning victory of the Hamas Islamists in the January Palestinian legislative elections, universally regarded as free and fair, served as a comeuppance not just for the corrupt Fatah incumbents but for the Bush administration as well. All the rhetoric about respecting a free vote proved to be just hot air when the results displeased Washington.

Nota Bene: Whitbeck readily acknowledges that at various times he has counseled the Palestinians in international negotiations. In so doing, he certainly incurred lasting enmities. Yet as this book makes clear, it is open to question how much advice the Palestinians took on board. But Whitbeck's compendium, if nothing else, durably exposes the very notion of "peace process" as hollow posturing tricked out in high-sounding words.

Whitbeck also has written about the president's global war on terrorism and the implications of the war he chose to wage in Iraq. Events now have borne out the forebodings of his clear-minded essays, events that finally have turned a majority of Americans against the wildest U.S. adventure ever in the Middle East. ■

Now retired from The Washington Post, Jonathan Randal '51 covered the Middle East for four decades. He is the author of Osama, The Making of a Terrorist (Knopf, 2004).

The World According to Whitbeck is a collection of op-ed essays on the Middle East conflict by John Whitbeck '64.

Alumni/ae are urged to advise the Exonians in Review editor of their own publications, recordings, films, etc., in any field, and those of classmates. Whenever possible, authors and composers are encouraged to send one copy of their books and original copies of articles to Edouard Desrochers '45 (Hon.), the editor of Exonians in Review, Phillips Exeter Academy, 20 Main Street, Exeter, NH 03833. Alumni/ae interested in reviewing works by fellow Exonians are also encouraged to contact the editor at the same address, or by email at edesrochers@exeter.edu.

ALUMNI/AE

1934—Dave Malcolm. A Whole New Ball Game: A Close-up Look at Diversity, Racism, Sexism, Affirmative Action, Cultural Pluralism and the Unfinished Business Remaining in 21st Century America. (Aslan Publishing, 2005)

1939—Carl E. Pickhardt. The Everything Parent's Guide to the Strong-Willed Child. (Adams Media, 2005)

— The Man Who Worshipped Butterflies and Other Fables About Human Foibles. (Xlibris Corporation, 2004)

1944—William J. Jackson. A Family History: Memoir of William J. Jackson II. (Privately published, 2005)

— New Jerseyans in the Civil War: For Union and Liberty. [paperback] (Rutgers University Press, 2006)

1947—John C. Pittenger. Politics Ain't Beanbag. (Author House, 2005)

1952—Karl Ludvigsen. The V12 Engine: The Untold Inside Story of the Technology, Evolution, Performance and Impact of All V12-Engined Cars. (Haynes Publishing, 2005)

1955—John K. Howat. Frederic Church. (Yale University Press, 2005)

1957—Peter Georgescu with David Dorsey. The Source of Success: Five Enduring Principles at the Heart of Real Leadership. (Jossey-Bass, 2005).

1958—John K. Hall, co-editor. Geological Framework of the Levant. [v. 1: Cyprus and Syria; v. 2: The Levantine Basin and Israel] (Historical Productions-Hall Ltd., 2005)

1964—Alan J. Clark. Cipher/Code of Dishonor: Aaron Burr, an American Enigma. (Author House, 2005)

1968—Neal Delmonico, translator. The Nectar of the Holy Name, by Manindranath Guha. Introduced, translated and annotated by Neal Delmonico. (Blazing Sapphire Press, 2005)

1973—Lloyd N. "Nick" Trefethen and Mark Embree. Spectra and Pseudospectra: The Behavior of Nonnormal Matrices and Operations. (Princeton University Press, 2005)

1981—Grace E. Jackson. Rethinking Psychiatric Drugs: A Guide for Informed Consent. (Author House, 2005)

1981—Jeremy King. Budweisers into Czechs and Germans: A Local History of Bohemian Politics, 1848–1948. (Princeton University Press, 2005)

1982—Kyra Thompson and Chuck Crisafulli. Go to Hell: A Heated History of the Underworld. (Simon Spotlight Entertainment/Simon & Schuster, 2005)

1985—Gregory D. S. Anderson. Auxiliary Verb Construction. (Oxford University Press, 2005)

1986—Kirsten Hoyte. Black Marks. [a novel] (Akashic Books, 2006)

1986—Lori V. (Crozier) Lincoln. The Era of My Youthful Ways. (Croness Publishing, 2005)

BRIEFLY NOTED

1967—Bruce Kennett, book designer]. "No Other Appetite: Sylvia Plath, Ted Hughes, and the Blood Jet of Poetry," by Stephen E. Enniss and Karen V. Kukil. (The Grolier Club, 2005)

1981—Grace E. Jackson. "Cybernetic Children" IN Making and Breaking Children's Lives, edited by Nicole Radcliffe and Craig Newes. (PCCS Books, 2005)

1985—Dana Pilson. "The Impressionist City in Motion: Childe Hassam and Moving Pictures in New York City, 1890–1900." IN Moving Pictures, American Art, and Early Film, 1880–1910. [Exhibit

catalog] (Hudson Hills Press/Williams College Museum of Art, 2005)

1988—James Bowley. "Supporting Pay for Performance With the Right Technology." IN Compensation and Benefits Review (v. 37, no. 5, 2005)

1994—Justin A.W. Cox and others. "The Kinematic Structure of a Wasatch Mountain Winter Storm During IPEX_IOP3." IN Monthly Weather Review (v. 133, no. 3, March 2005)

1996—Jasmine D. Wagner. "brooklyn, three stops out." IN ONTHEBUS (19/20, Bombshelter Press, 2005)

1996—Jasmine D. Wagner. "No Returns." [a poem] IN Indiana Review (v. 27, no. 2, Winter 2005)

2003—Jonathan Ortloff. "Harrison's Forgotten American Classic: Aeolian-Skinner's Opus 953 for Strong Auditorium at the University of Rochester, Rochester, New York." IN The Tracker: Journal of the Organ Historical Society. (v. 49, no. 3, Summer 2005)

FACULTY

L. Todd Hearon. "The Singers." [a poem] IN Poetry (v. 187, no. 3, December 2005)

Kevin King (Exeter Summer School faculty). All the Stars Came Out That Night. [a novel] (Dutton/Penguin, 2005)